Deepak Nayyar, economist and educationist, has spent four decades photographing scenes from across the world. His new book, Faces and Places, published by Roli Books, showcases a selection of his photographs.

Some of Deepak Nayyar’s (below) photographs date back to the era of the now-extinct 35mm colour negative film. The book is divided into thematic clusters, such as vignettes, people, streets and curiosities, nature, monuments, temples, churches, forts, palaces and cityscapes.

ROVING APERTURE

Deepak Nayyar, economist and educationist, has spent four decades photographing scenes from across the world. His new book, Faces and Places, published by Roli Books, showcases a selection of his photographs.

Some of Deepak Nayyar’s (below) photographs date back to the era of the now-extinct 35mm colour negative film. The book is divided into thematic clusters, such as vignettes, people, streets and curiosities, nature, monuments, temples, churches, forts, palaces and cityscapes.